Dear Chuck,

Thank you for emailing me. Your photo was found in BMEzine.com's tattoo gallery. Assuming you were the person voluntarily submitted it to them, you will have to contact them to remove the original photo.

Regarding the one where I have circled the incorrect character with red, I will remove that from my site. However under U.S. Law, I am free to link to the original photo and comment about it.

There following are some references on this type of matter from Electronic Frontier Foundation (EFF.org) if you are interested:

Absolutely, Chuck.

Think of this way in term of cars:

You go to a car dealership, the salesman sold you a Ford Pinto station wagon while telling you it is a Mustang. You drive around thinking it is a Mustang until some stranger comes along and showed you the difference. What would you do, even if the salesman no longer working there? Would you keep driving the Pinto without complaining? Or, would you get compensation?
